

13 Mindfulness Journal

A practical six-part journal for noticing thoughts, feelings, senses, and choices.

Turn scattered moments into brief, compassionate observations without chasing perfect calm.

Arrive

Begin with facts of this moment rather than judgment.

Today is... and I am in...

My breathing feels...

The strongest sensation is...

I notice my attention moving toward...

For the next five minutes, I allow...

Notice the Senses

Anchor attention in specific, ordinary details.

Three colors I can see are...

Two sounds near and far are...

One texture under my hand is...

A scent I notice is...

The temperature or air feels...

Name the Inner Weather

Describe feelings as changing experiences, not identities.

The feeling most present is...

It shows up in my body as...

It may be connected to...

Its intensity from 0-10 is...

What this feeling might need is...

Meet Thoughts Kindly

Separate a thought from a fact and choose a helpful response.

The thought repeating is...

Evidence for it is...

Evidence I may be missing is...

A more balanced sentence is...

One action aligned with my values is...

Choose Presence

Bring mindfulness into a simple task or interaction.

During my next drink, I will notice...

While walking, I will feel...

In my next conversation, I will listen for...

I will put one distraction away: ...

I will offer myself this permission...

Reflect and Release

Close the entry with appreciation and a gentle next step.

One detail I might have missed before was...

A moment of ease was...

I learned that my attention...

I can return to this practice by...

For tonight, I release...

Use and safety note

Journaling is optional support, not a substitute for care; pause if reflection increases distress and contact a trusted professional when needed.
