16 Wellness Routine Builder

A flexible routine map built around capacity, priorities, and steady progress.

Combine movement, nourishment, rest, connection, and planning without all-or-nothing rules.

Know Your Capacity

Start with the energy you actually have.

My current energy is 0-10: ...

The time I can protect is...

My nonnegotiable responsibility is...

A routine barrier I can plan around is...

My minimum version of a good day is...

Morning Anchor

Choose a short sequence that helps the day begin intentionally.

Drink water or another usual morning beverage

Open curtains or step into daylight

Take prescribed medication as directed if applicable

Review one priority, not the whole list

Use a two-minute body or breathing check-in

Midday Reset

Interrupt autopilot with nourishment and a realistic pause.

Eat or prepare a balanced option

Move gently for... minutes if comfortable

Check posture, jaw, shoulders, and breath

Send one necessary message

Choose the next task after a brief reset

Evening Landing

Shift from output toward recovery and sleep readiness.

Set a stopping point for work or chores

Prepare tomorrow's first item

Dim or move away from bright screens

Complete a calming hygiene step

Name one thing that was enough today

Support the Basics

Make the environment help instead of relying on willpower.

Keep an easy nourishing option visible

Place movement shoes or aids where they are used

Schedule a check-in with...

Set a reminder for a routine task

Remove one friction point from tomorrow

Review Without Judgment

Adjust the plan based on evidence, not shame.

What helped my energy this week?

What felt unrealistic or too costly?

Which minimum habit is worth keeping?

What support or accommodation would help?

My next seven-day experiment is...

Use and safety note

Adapt for health conditions and clinician guidance; wellness routines are not treatment and should never require pain, deprivation, or unsafe exertion.
